OnPay's new payroll Report Designer gives small businesses powerful insights into their operations

Customizable reports help businesses make better-informed decisions.

Atlanta, Georgia — OnPay, the top-rated payroll and HR provider, today announced the launch of the first-of-its-kind Report Designer, which gives small businesses and accountants the ability to create custom reports for analyzing personnel expenses in real time.

These updates to OnPay's payroll software are designed to make deeper insights accessible to all small business decision makers and their advisors. "This is the most powerful reporting tool I've seen in the payroll sites I've reviewed," said tech journalist Kathy Yakal, in a new PC Magazine review.

The new Report Designer offers the ability to add up to 50 data points to key reports, quickly reorder columns to show important data first, and save multiple views for different stakeholders. OnPay already gave clients the ability to view payroll reports in real time and apply filters to view expenses by department, location, or employee type. This new reporting tool now puts enterprise-level data in the hands of small business owners.

"Right now, the business owners we work with are optimistic but uncertain about where things are headed," said Jesse Burgess, CEO of OnPay. "It's always been our goal to make it easier for employers to manage their teams, and we think these new features will build on what we've already accomplished by helping to create a much better understanding of their business."

In addition to offering the adaptable Report Designer, OnPay's in-depth reporting also includes payroll cost reports that make it simple for small business owners to participate in COVID-19 relief programs. To learn more about OnPay's best-in-class payroll reporting, visit onpay.com/reports.
